Pats do it again, win 6th Super Bowl title

Brady, Belichick and company kept their dynasty rolling in a low-scoring affair against the Rams.

JOE PANTORNO
joseph.pantorno@metro.us

They say you can't teach an old dog new tricks. Good thing all the New England Patriots know how to do is win.

Even if it was in one of the ugliest Super Bowls ever.

For the third time in five years and the sixth time since 2002, the dynastic and veteran New England Patriots, led by Bill Belichick, are NFL champions, defeating the up-and-coming Los Angeles Rams 13-3 in Super Bowl LIII on Sunday night at Mercedes-Benz Stadium in Atlanta.

Running back Sony Michel provided the lone touchdown of the game with just seven minutes left in the fourth quarter as the Patriots defense put on one of the more dominating performances in the game's history, holding the NFL's No. 2 offense to just 260 total yards.

Jared Goff was held to just a 50 percent completion rate with just 229 yards through the air. He was the only real threat to stop as Los Angeles inexplicably kept Todd Gurley on the bench for large portions of the night.

Quarterback Tom Brady continued to cement his status as the greatest quarterback of all time, winning his sixth Super Bowl title in his ninth appearance in the big game. Only the Pittsburgh Steelers franchise has as many Super Bowl rings as Brady now.

While he didn't have the offense necessarily clicking on all cylinders, completing 21-of-35 passes for 265 yards and no touchdowns, his No. 1 target in Julian Edelman took home Super Bowl MVP honors after posting 10 receptions for 141 yards.

It was a less than auspicious start for both sides, whose high-powered offenses were expected to start rolling immediately. The game was scoreless through the first quarter, which featured a Brady interception on his first pass of the game, the Patriots burning through two timeouts in the first quarter, and a Stephen Gostkowski missed field goal.

The Rams were just broken as they accrued just 32 yards and a first down in their first three possessions.

A scoreless first quarter is commonplace when the Patriots are involved in a Super Bowl, though. Out of the now nine scoreless opening quarters in Super Bowl history, the Patriots have been featured in five of them. They had won the previous four.

Gostkowski finally provided a breakthrough with a 42-yard field goal inside five minutes of the second quarter. It proved to be the only scoring of the half as the Rams were held to just 57 total yards in the opening 30 minutes while giving star running back Todd Gurley just three carries.

The 3-0 scoreline was the second-lowest halftime mark in the game's history behind Super Bowl IX, which was 2-0 between the Pittsburgh Steelers and Minnesota Vikings.

The stout defensive play continued well into the second half as neither Brady nor Goff could find any sort of way to the end zone. While the Patriots would sputter near midfield, the Rams were simply overmatched by New England's defensive schemes, punting on all of their first eight possessions.

Midway through the third quarter, Edelman was outgaining the entire Rams offense 128-82.

The Rams found their breakthrough with 2:11 left in the third, their ninth possession of the game, thanks to a Greg Zuerlein 53-yard field goal that capped off a 10-play, 42-yard drive.

With the score at 3-3 heading into the final 15 minutes, it was the lowest combined score after three quarters in Super Bowl history.

With seven minutes in the game, a touchdown finally came when Michel provided the game-winning touchdown, punching home a two-yard rush. The Georgia product became just the second rookie in the last 30 years to record a rushing touchdown in a Super Bowl, which provided some life to the defensive stalemate.

The Patriots iced the game on the Rams' ensuing possession, one of their most promising of the game, when Stephon Gilmore picked Goff off on the New England four-yard line with 4:27 to go.

A strong ground game of Michel and Rex Burkhead proceeded to help get the Patriots up two possessions in the final minute. A Gostkowski 41-yard field goal with 1:12 left put New England up by two possessions.

Sure, it wasn't pretty. In fact, it might have been one of the worst Super Bowls ever played. But that won't bother Bostonians in the slightest, as they'll celebrate another title in Beantown this week.

Did You Know?

Dram Shop laws hold servers of alcoholic beverages legally responsible for harm that visibly intoxicated patrons cause to others. State liquor liability laws can apply not only to bars, liquor stores and restaurants, but also to social clubs and private events where liquor is served. The laws also include selling liquor without a license, selling liquor after hours and selling liquor to minors.

If a person is served alcoholic beverages while visibly intoxicated, and then gets into an accident injuring someone while driving drunk, the owner of the serving establishment can be held responsible in addition to the drunk driver.

Dram Shop lawsuits aren't limited to auto accidents — if a bar serves a visibly intoxicated person who then starts a fistfight and seriously injures another patron, that patron could sue the bar under the dram shop law.

In order to successfully sue under the dram shop law, you must be able to prove:

1. An employee of an establishment served alcohol to someone at a time that that person was visibly intoxicated and,

2. The business or host's decision to serve alcohol to the visibly intoxicated person directly led to the injuries.

If you feel that you or a loved one have been injured as a result of a Dram Shop violation, call us at (215) 569-1212 to explore whether you may have the right to recover full compensation for your injuries.

Resolution showing R. Kelly not welcome in Philly passed

The resolution shows City Council's support for the #MuteRKelly movement.

letters@metro.us

City Council passed a resolution created by Helen Gym late last week that showed solidarity with sexual assault victims and supporters of the #MuteRKelly movement, a campaign against musician and alleged sexual predator R. Kelly.

The musician has been at the center of a national outrage following the recent release of Lifetime channel documentary "Surviving R. Kelly," which takes a close look at his alleged violence against black women and girls over the last few decades.

Kenyette Barnes, the national cofounder of #MuteRKelly, came to Philly on Thursday to speak to the potential economic impact the proposed resolution could have against R. Kelly. "We've had eight active protests at concerts, canceled 12 concerts at an estimated $1.57 million in lost revenue," Barnes said. "This movement is about saying enough is enough and not allowing people to rest on hero worship."

Dr. Monique Howard is the executive director of Women Organized Against Rape and spoke at length against R. Kelly at Thursday's hearing.

"R. Kelly is the true definition of a sexual predator. He preys on young girls, those who are vulnerable, easy to manipulate and most likely starstruck," Howard said. "Some of his victims may have experienced abuse in previous relationships. We've heard about his crimes for decades, his crimes are outlined in his music and his moniker as the 'Pied Piper.' Robert Kelly's victims were young black girls, undervalued and undercared for."

As the founder of Victory Over Inconceivable Cowardly Experiences, local organizer and sexual trauma survivor LaQuisha Anthony was adamant in her support of the resolution at Thursday's hearing. "Banning R. Kelly sends a message that revenue is not more important than the safety and care of our women and girls, more specifically that black women and girls matter," Anthony added.

Anthony optimistically evoked the late civil rights leader Malcolm X in pointing to the resolution as the beginning of a paradigm shift. "Malcolm X said the most disrespected person in America is a black woman, the most unprotected person in America is the black woman, the most neglected person in America is the black woman. But yet today as a black woman and a survivor, this is a great step in making me feel protected, respected, cared for and supported."

Gov. Ralph Northam addresses the media Saturday. GETTY IMAGES

Former Vice President Joe Biden was among those calling for Northam's resignation.

Senior Democrats on Sunday accused embattled Virginia Gov. Ralph Northam of being dishonest and urged him to resign after he backtracked from an earlier admission that he appeared in racist garb in a yearbook photo.

Northam, a Democrat trying to resist mounting pressure from his party to step down, on Saturday walked back his admission that he was one of two people shown in the photo from his 1984 medical school yearbook, one person in blackface standing next to another in a Ku Klux Klan costume.

Northam, who took office a year ago, had admitted on Friday he was in the photo from the 1980s.

Even as he denied it on Saturday, he admitted to dressing up in blackface to imitate the late pop star Michael Jackson in a dance contest around the same time.

"He is being completely dishonest and disingenuous," Democratic U.S. Rep. Karen Bass said on NBC's "Meet the Press."

"I think given the overall climate around race in this country, especially over the last two years, it's completely unacceptable," said Bass, who chairs the Congressional Black Caucus.

She also took issue with Northam's claim that wearing blackface was commonplace in 1984.

"He's basically saying that he participated in it and especially when he described the time that he did the Michael Jackson impression," said Bass. "He even acted at the press conference like he was willing to moonwalk until his wife stopped him, which shows that he still does not understand the seriousness of his actions."

Bass' sentiment was echoed by Donald McEachin, a black House member from Virginia, who said he had spoken to Northam on Friday and that the governor was apologetic.

"So I was really surprised when the next day he comes out and says it's not him," McEachin, a Democrat, also said on "Meet the Press." "That was quite a surprise to me."

Former Virginia Gov. Terry McAuliffe, who has called for Northam to resign, said he believed he would do so.

"It doesn't matter whether he was in that photo or not in the photo at this point. We have to close that chapter," McAuliffe said on CNN's "State of the Union."

"And if Ralph is watching this today, I know how much he loves this Commonwealth of Virginia. And you have got to make the right decision. You have got to make the right moral decision."

Democratic party strategists worry that the controversy could hurt the party's chances in the 2020 presidential election. Virginia is a competitive state that leans Democratic.

Former Vice President Joe Biden, a Democrat weighing a 2020 presidential run, has also urged Northam to step down.

Other prominent Democrats — including 2020 presidential candidates Sen. Kamala Harris, Sen. Cory Booker, Sen. Kirsten Gillibrand and Julian Castro, a former top U.S. housing official — have been calling on Northam to resign since Friday. REUTERS

Mastering carpentry or building maintenance: What's the difference?

In cooperation with

Orleans TECHNICAL COLLEGE

ASK ORLEANS TECHNICAL COLLEGE

February is Career and Technical Education Month, which highlights schools like Orleans Technical College that help people gain the skills to begin careers. For the past 45 years, Orleans Tech has been serving the community with a diverse set of trades training programs—and preparing students for fulfilling futures. Ready to embark on the next chapter of your professional life? Today we're breaking down the main differences between two of their most popular programs: carpentry and building maintenance.

Isn't carpentry and building maintenance kind of the same thing?

Surprisingly, no! They sound interchangeable, but they're actually two very different career paths. Think of carpentry as building a structure from the ground up; the actual construction of a building. Our carpentry program teaches students how to navigate all these nuances, from understanding drywall and putting down flooring, to reading blueprints and building the frame and insulation.

Building maintenance, on the other hand, is more about maintaining a structure that's already up. The name sometimes suggests janitorial work, but that's not accurate. The structure was built by a carpenter, electrician, plumber, HVAC technician, but now it needs to be managed so that if something goes wrong, there's someone there who knows how to fix it without tearing down the whole building. The coursework here is focused on plumbing, electricity, carpentry, and other facets of keeping up a safe, functioning building. Put it another way: carpentry builds it; building maintenance maintains it.

How are these programs structured?

Students have a number of options. Orleans Technical College offers day classes that enable you to complete the program of your choice in just six months. Have a full-time job, family obligations, or just a demanding schedule? You can also opt for evening courses, which have a slower pace and last 13 months.

That said, each program offers a really unique learning approach. For carpentry, students actually learn how to build a two-story, 550-square-foot house, in the classroom! Meanwhile, the building maintenance program prepares students for careers working in facilities or property repair departments of hotels, apartment complexes, hospitals, and more. They're learning practical skills that are attractive to employers, like running electricity, putting in lighting fixtures, working with heating and air conditioning units, fixing appliances, and installing bathtubs and sinks.

Who would benefit from these programs?

Really anyone who's hungry for a new career and likes working with their hands. The building maintenance program is also particularly ideal for people who buy houses and flip them. Once they master these skills, they can handle costly repairs themselves without having to pay for an outside service to come do it for them.

What kinds of certifications will students have after completing these programs?

For building maintenance, it's the OSHA 10, EPA, Hilti Gun, and TracPipe. For carpentry, you earn certifications in OSHA 10 and Hilti Gun. These certifications really make you stand out to potential employers.

When do classes start?

Carpentry kicks off March 11 and building maintenance begins March 18. Orleans also has an evening building maintenance class starting April 8. What's more, Orleans Tech just renewed their five-year reaccreditation with the Accrediting Commission of Career Schools and Colleges (ACCSC), and was also recognized as a 2018 "School of Distinction."

How do I learn more?

Orleans Technical College, operated by JEVS Human Services, is hosting an open house on Saturday, February 9 from 10 a.m. to 1:00 p.m. at its campus (2770 Red Lion Road, Northeast Philadelphia). You can also learn more by calling (215) 709-7305, emailing admissions@orleanstech.edu, or visiting www.orleanstech.edu.

Sinatra meets 'The Sopranos' at The Borgata

Steve Schirripa. ALL GETTY IMAGES

The "Summer Wind" is in winter's chill in Atlantic City.

A.D. AMOROSI
letters@metro.us

With HBO's "The Sopranos" having reached its 20th birthday, and its creator David Chase currently filming its prequel with Michael Gandolfini (the late James Gandolfini's son) playing a young Tony Soprano, no one would argue that the New Jersey-based gangster series is as popular now as it ever was. You'd get whacked for thinking otherwise.

And the legend of Jersey's favorite son Frank Sinatra (Springsteen comes next) in Atlantic City, let alone any casino, never goes out of style. Frank's the Chairman of the Board.

So, to tie together two totems of Italian-American art and artifice in one night's worth of revelry — "Sinatra Meets the Sopranos" at the Borgata's Event Center, Feb. 9 — is genius, especially when you consider that the guy singing the Sinatra songs, Michael Martocci, knows Steven Schirripa ("Bobby Bacala") from their days growing up in Bensonhurst, Brooklyn.

"We're from the same neighborhood, me and Martocci," said Schirripa, who will show up onstage at The Borgata on Saturday with Michael Imperioli (Christopher Moltisanti) and Vincent Pastore ("Big Pussy" Bonpensiero) to tell true tall tales of behind-the-scenes action on "The Sopranos." "We've been doing different versions of a 'conversations with The Sopranos' show for several years, but Martocci had a good idea for pairing us together. What we do and what he does. He sings the songs, has all of the original charts, has a 24-piece band with a lot of guys who played with Sinatra. He knows what he's doing. Teaming up sounded like an interesting twist on what we normally do."

What the three Sopranos "do" is a Q&A, peek-behind-the-curtain as to what went on during the series' run, a valuable lesson considering that Pastore and Imperioli were there since the beginning (1998), and that the latter started solely as a writer on the series. "There are stories that Imperioli has that even I never heard before," said Schirripa. "And he's always coming up with some trivia that's a revelation." Like the fact that Steven Van Zandt was very nearly Tony Soprano, and not Gandolfini. "Mike's got a great story about him and Jim getting drunk before filming and the crew having to tie the two of them to a tree to get the shot."

Sure, they'll answer just about anything, including the still-infamous cut-to-black finale, before Martocci comes out and starts his set. "Vinnie might surprise you and sings a Sinatra duet with Mike," said Schirripa. "Not me, though. You don't want to hear me sing."

For Martocci — a VIP travel packager in his day job who did as much for Ol' Blue Eyes when the singer was touring — he's been singing Sinatra shows for years, with an annual gig in Red Bank as his highlight.

"I've got the original charts that Mr. Sinatra entrusted to me. My conductor was once Vincent Falcone, Jr., Sinatra's conductor. He told me to keep the music alive before he passed." When Martocci spent several years opening for the late Don Rickles, the comic giant would get in his tuxedo early ("He used to stay in his dressing room with his tux jacket on, but pants off") just to hear Martocci. "That's approval."

Schirripa happened to call Martocci about the "Sopranos" live Q&A to discuss a VIP/meet-and-greet component, when the latter's wheels started turning.

"Sinatra and Sopranos are the two biggest Italian family names when it comes to entertainment. Why not?" Martocci is thrilled when discussing the video portion of the "Sopranos" part of the show: "It starts with their best, signature scenes, and ends with each of them getting whacked" before he comes out and wows the crowd with everything from "Fly Me to the Moon" and "Summer Wind" to a boffo finale of "New York, New York" then "My Way."

Of Sinatra, Martocci says that he would watch the legend from the wings every night they toured together. "You watch so many impersonators, and so many are so bad. I never try to impersonate him. You'd be crazy to think you could. He was iconic, singular, the best."

Of "The Sopranos," Schirripa believes the series remains popular because of how its audience relates to Tony. "He was not a good guy — murderer, thief, cheat, philanderer — but you rooted for him. People have similar problems. Maybe not HIS problems, but they connected to the everyman dilemma that Tony embodied."

'Black Panther' to screen for free during Black History Month

The Oscar-nominated film will run in AMC Theatres through Feb. 7.

"Wakanda forever!" The popular battle cry that took pop culture by storm a year ago is back in cinemas for a limited time this month as part of Black History Month.

In honor of Black History Month, the Academy Award-nominated Marvel Studios film "Black Panther" is back in AMC Theatres nationwide for a limited run through Thursday, Feb. 7. Free screenings of the hit movie will remind moviegoers to cross their arms across their chests and root for the good guys.

In addition to re-releasing "Black Panther" in theaters, Marvel Studios' parent company Disney will donate $1.5 million to the United Negro College Fund (UNCF), a scholarship program that helps black students attend college.

UNCF President and CEO Dr. Michael Lomax was thankful for Disney's commitment to helping black students continue their education. "UNCF is grateful for The Walt Disney Company's enduring commitment to expanding these types of opportunities, and we're excited to continue to do so through our Walt Disney Company/UNCF Corporate Scholars Program," Lomax said. "I recall the excitement we all had when 'Black Panther' was first released, and it's fantastic that Disney is bringing the record-breaking movie back to the big screen so that we can relive that excitement."

With an almost all-black cast featuring stars like Chadwick Boseman, Michael B. Jordan and Angela Bassett, "Black Panther" grossed $1.3 billion at the box office and became the first superhero film to be nominated for the Academy Award for Best Picture.

READER WRITE-INS:

There was plenty of room on the subway on my way to work, so I decided to sit in an end seat where I could rest my arm on the rail. Room to sit comfortably can be a rare commodity, so I was off to a great start. Woefully, it was short-lived. At the second stop a woman entered the subway car and decided to stand next to me and slouch against the rail my arm was resting on. Her giant hood trimmed in fur was literally rubbing against my face. There were plenty of seats available, yet she decided to get uncomfortably close to me. Seriously, some people have no sense of personal space. Kindly keep your fur out of my face!

Aramingo Carpet & Flooring takes customer service to the next level.

MOLLY GIVEN
Molly.Given@metro.us

Aramingo Carpet is a family business—not just because most of the family works there—simply because they treat everyone like family. Owner Ken Stern believes that the way to run his business is to treat everyone with respect.

"Treat people the way you expect to be treated. You want to treat everyone fair and give them the best price possible. Customer service is really number one," Stern says.

With customer service being the first priority, it's easy to see just how hard Aramingo Carpet's employees work for their patrons. Aramingo provides their customers with the knowledge they need to find the right product, even if that means not buying from them. Stern emphasizes that educating the customer is important, he wants Philadelphians who stop by his store to know what questions to ask when looking for the right fit for a carpet and to know where to go to buy it.

Being that involved and helpful with customers, sometimes not even making a dime off of them, is what brings people back to their warehouse. If they don't buy from Aramingo at a certain time, the customer service will certainly bring them back. Stern stops at nothing to provide for his customers.

"Our hours are technically our hours, but if I have a customer that is on their way in here at 8 o'clock and I'm here- I wait for them. I don't throw people out the door if I'm closing at 5, I wait and I work with them. I try and do everything I can to make my customers happy."

Keeping customers happy also means being honest. Stern is big on honesty, something he learned from his father and grandfather who were also successful businessmen. "If you're honest people appreciate that," Stern said. "You have to respect the truth. People might not like everything you say but if its the truth you have to respect it- you can't argue with the truth."

Keeping honesty in mind is also what makes Aramingo's atmosphere welcoming as well. They may not have a storefront with huge windows and pretty lights, but they do have a helpful staff, plenty of product and a family-friendly atmosphere. "There's no fancy showroom here. Most of the people here are family. My wife works for me, my son-in-law works for me, my cousin works for me."

Stern works full time- even when he's on vacation. He could be on a cruise in the Bahamas and still answer his cell phone for his customers (they all have his personal number). Oh, wait, that did actually happen.

Aramingo offers many services for customers including installation, layaway and even working with you to find your perfect fit- if they don't have it they will order it or help you find where to get it. Keeping the family vibe and treating people with respect is Aramingo's style and its something that will always be in fashion.

Now that the Super Bowl is over, viewers can return to their regularly scheduled TV programming for the first full week of February. So from the return of HBO's "2 Dope Queens" specials to Hulu's unique coming-of-age comedy series "PEN15," here's what to watch on TV this week..

ANDREW HUSBAND

"MAN WITH A PLAN"

Feb. 4 at 8:30 p.m. on CBS

Friends alum Matt LeBlanc's CBS comedy "Man With a Plan" returns for a third season with the premiere episode "Wife-Proof." Now that his wife and business partner Andi (Liza Snyder) is going to be spending more time in the offices of their construction company, Adam (LeBlanc) realizes that he needs to turn the male-dominated den into a more female-friendly environment. Kevin Nealon, Kali Rocha, Stacey Keach and other regular cast members are also returning.

"AMERICAN HOUSEWIFE"

Feb. 5 at 8 p.m. on ABC

The ABC family comedy series returns from a short break for its midseason premiere on Tuesday. It couldn't have come at a better time, what with the recent government shutdown and reports of delays at the IRS, for "The Things You Do" finds husband Greg (Diedrich Bader) insisting on doing the family's taxes. Wife Katie (Katy Mixon), meanwhile, quickly realizes that she must take matters into her own hands in order to avoid catastrophe.

"2 DOPE QUEENS"

Feb. 8 at 11 p.m. on HBO

Following the official end of the podcast and the first run of HBO specials in 2018, Jessica Williams and Phoebe Robinson's comedy variety series is back for another four episodes. This time around, they will focus on "Fashion," "Nostalgia," "Music" and "Regal AF." Celebrity guests include Lupita Nyong'o, Daniel Radcliffe, Janet Mock, Lizzo and Keegan-Michael Key. Each entry will also feature a slew of up-and-coming stand-up comedians.

"PEN15"

Feb. 8 on Hulu

Imagine a mashup of Bo Burnham's celebrated film "Eighth Grade" and the classic camp comedy "Wet Hot American Summer." Chances are what you imagined will be pretty close to Maya Erskine and Anna Konkle's quirky coming-of-age comedy series "PEN15," which debuts Friday on Hulu. Executive produced by Andy Samberg, Akiva Schaffer and Jorma Taccone of The Lonely Island fame, "PEN15" sees Erskine and Konkle playing 13-year-old versions of themselves during the year 2000.

"SONG OF PARKLAND"

Feb. 7 at 7 p.m. on HBO

Award-winning documentary filmmaker Amy Schatz's latest, "Song of Parkland," follows what transpired after the horrific mass shooting at Marjory Stoneman Douglas High School in Parkland, Florida. Specifically, the TV movie chronicles the aftermath of drama teacher Melody Herzfeld's efforts to protect her 65 theater students, whom she shoved into a storage closet during the shooting. Song of Parkland sees Herzfeld and her students return to school to finish their annual children's musical production.

"RAY ROMANO: RIGHT HERE, AROUND THE CORNER"

Feb. 5 on Netflix

Ray Romano has recently pursued more dramatic and surprising roles in his acting career. Twenty three years after his last stand-up special, however, the comic is returning to his roots with a brand new one titled "Ray Romano: Right Here, Around the Corner." Combining two sets from the Comedy Cellar and Village Underground clubs in New York, the new Netflix special streams Tuesday.

Using no-strings-attached student loan payoff-assistance programs, college loan alternatives and annual student debt letters, these three universities are doing their part to curb college debt.

1. University of Pittsburgh

The University of Pittsburgh is offering graduating seniors up to $5,000 in federal student loan relief with one request: They pay it forward.

The school's new program, Panthers Forward, will help recent graduates chip away at student debt and introduce them to alumni mentors to encourage professional development. Students have no obligation to repay the gift, but the university is encouraging recipients to make financial contributions to sustain the program.

The university selected 150 class of 2019 seniors for the program's inaugural year, including history major Cassidee Knott.

"I like the fact that Pitt was able to acknowledge that student debt is so outrageous and work with students to help them make it less daunting," says Knott, who estimates she has about $100,000 in student loans.

After graduation, the university will make loan payments directly to participants' loan servicers.

2. Purdue University

Purdue University's Back a Boiler income-share agreement program is an alternative to private student loans and parent PLUS loans.

In an income-share agreement, or ISA, students get tuition funding in exchange for a fixed percentage of their future income for a set period of time. There's a cap on the total amount they can pay back.

2017 Purdue graduate Andrew Hoyler received $16,000 through an ISA in his second year of school. Now, 5.89% of the monthly income he earns as a regional pilot goes toward repayment. Hoyler will make payments for 104 total months — about eight and a half years — or until he has paid back 2.5 times the initial amount, or $40,000.

Hoyler, who also has federal student loans, says the ISA has been "more streamlined and easy to understand." He also has peace of mind knowing that he can afford payments even with entry-level pilot wages.

But income-share agreements aren't right for everyone.

ment, high-earners could end up paying far more than the amount they received and more than they would have with a student loan. Students can use Purdue's Back a Boiler comparison tool to weigh the costs of an ISA against private student loans and parent PLUS loans.

3. Indiana University
Student loan borrowing at Indiana University has dropped 19% across all IU campuses from the 2011-12 school year to 2017-18, according to the university. During that period, the administration has implemented a suite of resources and programs to reduce borrowing.

Most prominently, the university begin sending annual letters informing students of the amount they've borrowed and their estimated future monthly loan payments. Since then, states including Indiana, Nebraska and Florida have passed laws requiring colleges and universities to disclose similar information to federal student loan borrowers annually.

"This is a personalized summary of your estimated current student loan indebtedness," a letter might begin.

A student would then find details such as:
Total education loans: $25,000.
Assumed interest rate: 6.80%.
Monthly payment: $287.
Cumulative payments: $34,524.
Projected interest paid: $9,524.
The debt letters were one piece of a larger initiative to reduce borrowing; it's not clear that the debt letters alone caused Indiana University's student borrowing reduction, according to a 2017 independent report published through Brookings Economic Studies program.

The initiative also includes the university's MoneySmarts program, which offers financial literacy education and tools, one-on-one consultations, and for-credit personal finance courses.

How to keep student debt affordable Regardless of whether you attend one of the above schools, choose a college that enables you to keep student loan payments manageable.

As a rule of thumb, limit college borrowing such that future monthly payments don't consume more than 10% of your projected income. A student loan affordability calculator can help you make this estimation.

Then, look for relevant programs that are relatively low-cost or award enough scholarship money to offset your out-of-pocket expenses.

This approach isn't as fun as believing your dream school is priceless. But you'll thank yourself when paying the monthly student loan bills in the future.

When will Philadelphia get online sports betting?

Right now it's retail or bust in Pennsylvania.

MATT BURKE

Matt Burke is a veteran sports journalist and the Founder and Editorial Director of MetroBet.

Retail sportsbooks have been up and running in the state of Pennsylvania since December, but no one in the state was allowed to throw down on the Super Bowl online — at least legally — yesterday.

There is the general feeling among industry insiders that online betting will be allowed in the state by the start of the next NFL season, this coming September, but that things will continue to move slowly on that front for the next few months.

There are several legal loopholes the existing casinos have to jump through in order to get their online product started.

The state of New Jersey currently has eight sportsbooks that are live, but all of them are affiliated with an on-site sportsbook or casino. Pennsylvania will do the same when it comes to partnership, at least at first.

One roadblock that recently popped up is that the U.S. Department of Justice released a legal opinion to start the year that "prohibits interstate wagering, to apply to any form of gambling that crosses state lines, not just sports betting," according to the Associated Press.

The Pennsylvania Gaming Control board informed casinos last month that they have until Feb. 17 to alter their online plans to adhere to the changes in the federal Wire Act.

GETTY IMAGES

"This has been years in the making," co-founding director of the University of New Hampshire School of Law Sports Wagering and Integrity Program Daniel Wallach told the AP. "A number of influential Republican lawmakers, backed by Sheldon Adelson through political campaign contributions, have wanted to see the Wire Act restored to its original intent. The problem is the original intent of the Wire Act only applies to sports betting, and I think this muddies the water."

In New Jersey last summer, on-site sportsbooks quickly teamed up with major national players in the online sports betting industry. Daily fantasy sports giants DraftKings and FanDuel are doing the brunt of the business in New Jersey when it comes to online sports betting.

DraftKings CRO Matt Kalish told MetroBet in December that he expects Pennsylvania to be online at some point in 2019 but that nothing is imminent.

Betting smart on college basketball

VSiN

Now that the football season is officially over, sports bettors will devote much of their winter focus to basketball. College hoops will be front and center from now through March Madness. Pro basketball becomes more popular with casual fans when the playoffs begin in April, because the best teams are playing and no superstars are taking rest breaks.

Are YOU ready to bet college basketball?

If you even have to think about the answer, you're NOT! This is not a sport you can just jump into cold turkey in February and expect to beat. Markets are now very well-informed because teams have played more than 20 regular-season games, and are halfway through their conference round-robins.

Don't peruse the huge overall schedule and bet a half-dozen hunches. Get caught up with how the market sees your teams of interest, and then emphasize potential changes in form.

* Maybe a team you follow has finally started putting the pieces together, while the market is still pricing it as a non-factor. Review the past few box scores to make sure that improvement is real, then make some conservative bets that it will continue.

* On the other end of the spectrum, maybe a team you follow recently hit a wall, or is imploding because of bad chemistry. This is common in college basketball, particularly in the month of February. Players who can't stand each other or their coach know that nothing really matters until the conference tournament arrives in a few weeks. Slumping, unmotivated teams sink faster than the market accounts for. (It takes a while for math influences to catch "down" to a new reality).

While you're getting your feet wet with conservative betting (or "passing" entirely while you get up to speed), you can focus your energies on learning the important skill sets of relevant teams. Defense, rebounding, shot selection, ball movement, and having a variety of scoring threats are among factors that have the most impact on which teams win and cover games.

Where do you find information on those categories?

You can do a web search on a conference-by-conference basis for your local leagues. The website teamrankings.com posts stats in a stunning variety of college basketball categories. You've probably heard of Ken Pomeroy's respected site kenpom.com. An inexpensive $19.95 monthly subscription charge (12 months) provides access to a treasure trove of data if you love stats.

If you're not a stathead,watch your teams or conferences of interest more intently with an eye on key skill sets. You'll be amazed at what you learn when you're not just rooting for a bet to win.

Eagles with 20/1 odds to win SB in 2020

Birds are a decent bet to return to glory next season.

GLEN MACNOW

Glen Macnow is a renowned sports talk radio voice in Philadelphia on WIP. He is the host of the Eagles official pregame show.

Now that the Super Bowl no one in Philadelphia wanted to watch is over, let's start looking at what really matters: The Eagles' chances to end this one-year drought and rightfully reclaim their title next February.

Vegas, of course, wasted no time posting odds for Super Bowl LIV. Let's be honest: It's no easy feat predicting now who'll be bathed in confetti next February. There's no news yet about free agency, the draft, trades, waivers, retirements and injuries. You're throwing a dart in the dark.

So why do the casinos offer you a chance to bet now? Because they know you will. And why will you? Because it's fun to take an uninformed flier once in a while. Occasionally, it works out. Hey, it got really close for Biff Tannen betting on the 2015 World Series in "Back to the Future II."

Last June, I was honored to place the first-ever sports bet at Delaware Park, getting stingy 9/2 odds on the Eagles to repeat. That didn't work out, although the ride was fun at the end.

This year, the early number shows our favorite team earning no such respect. The first numbers from Las Vegas had the Birds at 20/1, tied with the likes of the Ravens and (ugh) Cowboys.

At first glance, that seems like a good deal. Unless you're just looking to grab early action, however, my advice is to hold back.

Logically, it's way too early to predict the direction this team is headed. Leaving aside the departure of Nick Foles, there is uncertainty at these position groups: running back, offensive line, defensive line, linebacker and secondary.

Is Jason Peters returning one more season at left tackle? And if a shredded Achilles sidelines Brandon Brooks, who replaces the Pro Bowl left guard? Is Isaac Seumalo (gulp) really going to be handed a starting job?

There is doubt about the return of so many of our recent heroes: Brandon Graham. Darren Sproles. Chris Long. Jordan Hicks. Ronald Darby. Hey, we haven't even considered the likelihood that Carson Wentz will fully heal from his injury and return to MVP form one year later.

Please understand I'm not saying the Eagles can't have a marvelous journey and end up at Super Bowl LIV on Feb. 2, 2020, at the Hard Rock Stadium in Miami Gardens. It's going to require GM Howie Roseman to have a masterful offseason — just as he did two years ago.

Meanwhile, I'd wait for more meaningful odds to come out in the summer, when the oddsmakers have a better sense of what teams are about. If you really want to invest in something right now, I'd suggest booking early airfare for that February weekend in Miami. Even if the Eagles don't make it, there are worse places to be that time of year.

Flyers–Canucks betting preview

The Flyers (23-23-6) have won seven straight contests, a streak that was unthinkable before mid-January, and are in position to make it eight straight wins when the Vancouver Canucks (24-22-6) come to the Wells Fargo Center on Monday night.

Philadelphia goaltending allowed two or fewer goals in four straight contests (despite being outshot in three of those four matches) before the Oilers struck four times on Saturday. But the Flyers' forwards were up to the challenge, as captain Claude Giroux looked like his old self with a one-goal, two-assist outing, while Sean Couturier added a goal and an assist as well. Right winger Jakub Voracek added three assists (giving him nine total during Philly's win streak) before sophomore center Nolan Patrick buried the game winner in overtime.

Vancouver has been outshot in five straight contests by a total of 47 on-goal attempts. For a Flyers team that's struggled in that department, too, this visitor is more than a welcome sight. The Canucks have struggled with consistency of late, going 1-4 in their last five games following a win, per Covers.com. Furthermore, Vancouver is 13-40 in its last 53 tilts after scoring five or more goals in their previous game (they exit a 5-1 win over the Avalanche).

Canuck forwards Bo Horvat and Brock Boeser are both riding four-game point streaks, but the red-hot Flyers are tough to play against at the moment.

3 Takeaways from Sixers' mini West Coast road trip

Even though they split four games out west, there were still a few good things we saw from the Sixers.

JOVAN ALFORD
jovan.alford@metro.us

In the midst of a tough 12-game stretch against teams who have a winning record, the Philadelphia 76ers embarked on a mini four-game West Coast trip that saw them take on the defending NBA champion Golden State Warriors along with the Denver Nuggets, Los Angeles Lakers and Sacramento Kings.

These four games, in particular, would be tough for the Sixers as they were without Joel Embiid and Jimmy Butler at the beginning of the road trip in Denver. Despite losing to the Nuggets by 16, there were a couple of bright spots, including Corey Brewer, who scored 20 points and could be signed for the rest of the season.

However, after that loss, the Sixers won two straight games in dominating fashion over the Lakers and Warriors. Second-year point guard Ben Simmons and Embiid played huge roles in both games, helping the team on both ends of the floor.

Finally, the Sixers ended the road trip with a 115-108 loss to the upstart Kings on Saturday night. Even though they split the four-game road trip (2-2), there was a lot to take away that Philly can use as a learning lesson to finish up their tough 12-game stretch before the All-Star break.

SIMMONS PROVES WHY HE WAS NAMED AN ALL-STAR

After an impressive rookie campaign, the 6-foot-10 point guard from Australia has kept up his tremendous play this season, leading to him being named an All-Star.

In 52 games this season, Simmons is averaging almost a triple-double with 16.9 points, 9.4 rebounds, and 8.1 assists in 33.7 minutes per game. Along with his offense, Simmons' defense has stayed up to par as he is sporting a DRtg (defensive rating) of 107.

Against the Warriors on Thursday night, Simmons did an excellent job on both sides of the floor, showing why he was named to the All-Star team. The second-year point guard was able to get the basket with ease and played with unfathomable aggression.

However, when he wasn't scoring in the points, Simmons was still dishing out assists but also sticking to Warriors' superstar point guard Stephen Curry like glue.

In the waning moments of the fourth quarter, the 22-year-old point guard came up with a huge block on Curry, after the former two-time MVP got away from him for a split-second.

IMPROVED BENCH PLAY

One of the Sixers' biggest issues this season has been their inconsistent bench play. Some games their bench shows up, while other times they can barely squeeze any points out of them.

Thankfully, for the first three games of their road trip, the bench stepped up when the starters needed a rest. As I previously mentioned, Brewer had a good game against the Nuggets but has quietly tailed off just a little bit on the offensive end.

However, Landry Shamet, Jonah Bolden, Mike Muscala and Shake Milton to an extent have provided a spark in spurts. Going back to Thursday night's game against Golden State, the Sixers' bench outscored the Warriors' bench, 31-16.

In addition to the offensive outburst, the bench also played good defense with Bolden leading the way with a DRtg of 87 and an insane defensive rebounding percentage of 32.2.

A couple of days earlier against the Lakers, the Sixers' bench could not keep with Los Angeles' second unit, getting outscored, 41-32.

But Muscala showed up with a solid performance consisting of 17 points (6-13 FG, 3-6 3pt) and seven rebounds. If the Sixers do not make any huge moves at the trade deadline, they will need Muscala and others to continue to step up.

IS BUTLER GETTING HIS GROOVE BACK?

Even though he missed the first game of this road trip and did not have the best of games against the Warriors, Butler still did the little things to help his team out.

The star two-way guard struggled to score points against Golden State but did not quit on defense, contesting every shot Kevin Durant threw up.

Then on Saturday night against the Kings, Butler found his groove again, scoring 29 points (11-18 FG, 4-8 3 pt) while contributing seven assists, four rebounds and two steals.

It was great to see the veteran guard round into shape because over the last few weeks, some fans have grown weary of him and are beginning to wonder if the Sixers made the right decision to acquire him. Head coach Brett Brown is trying to figure out what works not only for the team but Butler as well.

Therefore, we should expect to see Butler continue to play some minutes at point guard, which will allow him to create opportunities for himself and ultimately get others involved.

Collin Gillespie leads Villanova past Georgetown again

The sophomore guard's 30-point performance was enough to keep the Wildcats undefeated in the Big East.

JON MARKS
sports@metro.us

Not even the greatest Georgetown player of them all, Patrick Ewing, knew the name of Villanova's latest "Hoya Destroya."

That's how unexpected 6-foot-3 sophomore guard Collin Gillespie's 30-point explosion was for the Wildcats in a much-harder-than-it-sounds 77-65 win over their fiercest Big East rival in Philly on Sunday.

That's who made the difference, as Jay Wright's No. 14-ranked 18-4 gang made it 10 in a row, nine straight over Georgetown stretching back to 2013 to the delight of a Wells Fargo Center crowd that included Philadelphia Mayor Jim Kenney.

"Giving up 30 to um… uh…" said a bewildered Ewing, after his 14-8 club hung with Nova until the last six-and-a-half minutes, when the Hoyas went cold while Villanova went on a 16-2 run to break open what had been a 53-53 game early in the second half.

"We focused on him and knew that he can shoot," said Ewing. "But we just gave him too much air space and he was able to knock down all those threes."

The kid from Archbishop Wood in Warminster, Pa., went 6-for-11 from beyond the arc, picking up the slack for the rest of his struggling teammates, who shot a combined 3-for-20 on three-pointers. It was a performance reminiscent of another Villanova guard of similar build, who specialized in knocking down clutch shots at one end while diving on the floor for loose balls at the other.

Yes, there's a lot of Ryan Arcidiacono in Gillespie.

"In a lot of ways he does remind me of Arch (Arcidiacono)," agreed Jay Wright, who credited Georgetown's defense with most of Villanova's shooting difficulties.

"He's got that Northeast Philly mentality I love. It's a simple-mindedness," he said.

"Do the right thing. Give a great effort. Be a good teammate. He does things that are the essence of our program."

Naturally, Gillespie downplayed his part. "I did a good job catching and shooting," said the sophomore guard, who basically kept the Wildcats afloat until Phil Booth snapped out of a 1-for-10 shooting funk to score eight points during Nova's decisive late run.

"Guys got me shots when I was off the ball. I was able to play off my shot and play with confidence.

"I tried to take pieces of Arch's game," continued Gillespie. "I didn't really know him personally, but I've grown up with a lot of his cousins so I know his family pretty well. His toughness is something not a lot of people have in them."

Villanova's toughness as a team has become apparent as well. While Wright admits he has no idea where the Wildcats will wind up, he likes the direction they're headed.

With the shots not falling in this one, they turned it up on defense, shutting out Georgetown's leading scorer, Jessie Govan, while holding the Hoyas to just 33.8 percent shooting from the field.

"I know this team has a great upside," said Wright, as Eric Paschall scored 13 of his 24 in the second half, while Booth added 12 of his 14 to help erase Georgetown's 34-33 halftime lead.

"I know we lack some experience. I just want to see how far we can take this ride and we'll do it one game at a time."

Furthermore, having improving sophomores like Gillespie, Jermaine Samuels (16 rebounds) and Dhamir Cosby-Roundtree (seven points and six boards) along with freshman Saddiq Bey and Jahvon Quinerly could pay dividends down the road.

"I kind of feel like our sophomores are really starting to step up and we need it," said Wright, whose club hosts Creighton on Wednesday, before next Saturday's Big East first-place showdown at Marquette.

"That's what a season is. Sophomores and freshmen are different from when they started the year. I think ours are starting to get it."

So much so that maybe next time, the opposing coach might even know their names.

Report: Sixers interested in Wesley Matthews

For a second consecutive season, Philly could find themselves acquiring players through the buyout market.

JOVAN ALFORD
jovan.alford@metro.us

GETTY IMAGES

If the Philadelphia 76ers are not able to make a trade in the next few days, they could become very active in the buyout market for the second straight season.

Kyle Neubeck of PhillyVoice reported late last week that the Sixers are interested in New York Knicks guard Wesley Matthews, in the event he is bought out. In addition to Philly, the Houston Rockets are also interested in the veteran guard, per ESPN's Tim McMahon.

However, ESPN's Ian Begley reported on Friday that the Knicks have heard from at least one team who is interested in trading for the veteran.

This latest news coincided with what Sports Illustrated's Jake Fischer mentioned last week, reporting that rival team executives expect New York to try to drum up some trade conversations before Thursday's deadline.

Matthews, along with his former Maverick teammates in DeAndre Jordan and Dennis Smith, was traded to the Knicks in a blockbuster seven-player deal that saw Kristaps Porzingis, Tim Hardaway Jr., Trey Burke and Courtney Lee go to Dallas last week.

In addition to Matthews, who is making $13.6 million this season, Jordan ($22.9 million) is another potential buyout candidate for the Knicks. Potential buyout candidates need to be waived by March 1 to be eligible for the playoffs.
